FOR ALL MY STUDENTS

The distressing facts of education for the economically disadvantaged are honestly portrayed in this documentary filmed at a ghetto high school in Palo Alto, California. Students candidly discuss their feelings about their teachers, and teachers probe the reasons for their own successes and failures.

FOR ALL MY STUDENTS raises many questions but answers few because it is designed to stimulate self-confrontation, analysis, and open discussion. It illustrates both poor and effective teaching in difficult classroom situations and suggests ways of providing special help for disadvantaged students.

Intended primarily for pre-service and in-service training of secondary school teachers, the film is also of interest to school administrators, students, and parents. Discussion guide available.

WORLDS APART

From Martin Deutsch's Institute for Developmental Studies at New York University comes a perceptive film that exposes deficiencies in education for the economically disadvantaged child and presents innovations that have been tested and found successful by the Institute. The film's thesis, that "the schools have failed the children of the poor," is visually documented in scenes that contrast life in the ghetto with life as the slum child learns about it in textbooks and curriculum.

Focusing on pre-school children, WORLDS APART demonstrates methods for developing self-esteem, teaching concept formation and language efficiency. Although primarily designed for in-service and pre-service teacher training, the film can be used effectively by parent and community groups.
