Take a look at his record.

Councilman Williams is the man who:

— Got city approval to plan three major industrial parks within South San Diego for more jobs and a better economy.
— Fought for high Affirmative Action goals.
— Exposed the wasteful dealings of the General Services Administration which resulted in federal investigations.
— Created a special task force to determine ways to keep social service and human care agencies close to the urban center.
— Sponsored a far reaching Council policy to make all meetings of city boards, commissions and corporations open to the public.
— Proposed tough regulations to protect non-smokers' rights.
— Called for a public review of files the police may be keeping on you.
— Won Council support for state laws which would require gas station operators to post prices of gasoline on signs visible to the motorist.
— Warned shoppers of how meatpackers where cheating on labeling.
— Backed innovative police reforms resulting in community oriented policing and the highly successful beat approach.
— Advocated new rules which will enable industry and nonprofit organizations to combat vandalism.
— Developed ways to combat bicycle thievery.
— Lead efforts to make elected officials more accountable to the public.
— Voted for the toughest campaign reform law in the nation.
— Moved to make sure that all low and moderate income housing built with new state financing will meet high standards and be made available to the people who need it.
— Proposed the establishment of the city's first Consumer Affairs Advisory Board and Consumer Affairs department.

The list goes on. Leon should too.
