MEETING NOTES

December 18, 1980

Present: Hal Brown, Delia Talamantez, Beverly Yip, Anna Cazares, Heidi Horner, Nathan Okawa

HEIDI: When Dr. Guthrie sent out the questionnaires it wasn't clear who should answer. What he did was he had a _____ five sample generated for 10,000 and he had to drop out about 500. After he got some of the responses back . . . was that the parents didn't know what child it was for. So, they answered for the wrong child and he got responses for the wrong grade. It's hard to tell if he counted them. The skip interval is not a random way of getting responses (e.g., 6 kids, 3 would get chosen). It was apparent that in some cases families would get more than one survey and they would fill them out.

HAL: The general conclusion is that you feel the survey is sufficiently invalid to make any type of decision on.

NATHAN: Just the response return alone invalidates it.

HEIDI: They didn't do all the secondary schools. Plus, he included ones that didn't qualify as secondary schools. He himself did not review for keypunch errors. He picked up the surveys from her(?) and took them directly to the keypunching firm so he never saw the real surveys. Whether he checked the keypunching errors or not we don't know.

BEVERLY: Because if he had reviewed them he would have thrown out those that did not have enough answers.

HEIDI: The question that asks if you feel integration in the other schools is successful, 395 out of 1,915 did not answer.

HEIDI: For cross check questions he didn't throw out those that had two extreme opposite answers.
