[MS-0087.008.011.005]

Statement by CURE for the City Council on October 16, 1969.

CURE strongly urges the council to provide the funds under consideration today for CIC in order that it may continue to operate. We consider it imperative that CIC be funded for these important reasons:

First, it is vital that a functioning human relations agency be operating until San Diego can learn what the city's participation will be in the proposed county-wide human relations agency and what services the city will receive.

Second, in the public knowledge, the decision to cut off funds for CIC has been so sudden that the community has not had adequate opportunity to inform itself of the issues and to participate in the decision. As yet we have heard nothing to reduce our confidence in or respect for CIC's conduct of its primary function--that is, the clarifying and solving of human relations problems.

For the present, the important point is to fund CIC. For the future, we would hope that the final permanent San Diego human relations agency which evolves will come about through the full participation of all citizens in the planning. We also hope that that organization will be independent enough so that all of us will have confidence in it and will feel encouraged to use it. It is our belief that the dedicated staff of CIC would and should continue to be an important part of any such future San Diego human relations endeavor.

Statement by CURE for the City Council on October 16, 1969.

CURE strongly urges the council to provide the funds under consideration today for CIC in order that it may continue to operate. We consider it imperative that CIC be funded for these important reasons:

First, it is vital that a functioning human relations agency be operating until San Diego can learn what the city's participation will be in the proposed county-wide human relations agency and what services the city will receive.

Second, in the public knowledge, the decision to cut off funds for CIC has been so sudden that the community has not had adequate opportunity to inform itself of the issues and to participate in the decision. As yet we have heard nothing to reduce our confidence in or respect for CIC's conduct of its primary function--that is, the clarifying and solving of human relations problems.

For the present, the important point is to fund CIC. For the future, we would hope that the final permanent San Diego human relations agency which evolves will come about through the full participation of all citizens in the planning. We also hope that that organization will be independent enough so that all of us will have confidence in it and will feel encouraged to use it. It is our belief that the dedicated staff of CIC would and should continue to be an important part of any such future San Diego human relations endeavor, if they so desire.

Statement by CURE for the City Council on October 16, 1969. Cure file

CURE strongly urges the council to provide the funds under consideration today for CIC in order that it may continue to operate. We consider it imperative that CIC be funded for these important reasons:

First, it is vital that a functioning human relations agency be operating until San Diego can learn what the city's participation will be in the proposed county-wide human relations agency and what services the city will receive.

Second, in the public knowledge, the decision to cut off funds for CIC has been so sudden that the community has not had adequate opportunity to inform itself of the issues and to participate in the decision. As yet we have heard nothing to reduce our confidence in or respect for CIC's conduct of its primary function--that is, the clarifying and solving of human relations problems.

For the present, the important point is to fund CIC. For the future, we would hope that the final permanent San Diego human relations agency which evolves will come about through the full participation of all citizens in the planning. We also hope that that organization will be independent enough so that all of us will have confidence in it and will feel encouraged to use it. It is our belief that the dedicated staff of CIC would and should if they desire. continue to be an important part of any such future San Diego human relations endeavor.