Mother, 4 Sons Face Jail in Rights Case

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Vivian Hallinan, wife of attorney Vincent Hallinan, and two of her sons today began 30-day jail terms for 1964 civil rights sit-in demonstrations.

Mrs. Hallinan and sons, Patrick and Matthew, turned themselves in last night to Sheriff Matt Carberry after they were sentenced by Municipal Judge George E. Maloney.

Maloney also handed down the same sentence to another son, Terence, but granted him a 10-day stay to clean up business affairs, and to a fourth son, Conn, but granted a stay until Aug. 1 so he can complete summer school.

Mrs. Hallinan said she and her two sons preferred to go to jail immediately.

"We want to get it over with," she said.

The Hallinans spent the night in County Jail here, and were transferred to the jail at San Bruno this morning. They were accompanied by Matthew's girl friend, Laura Walsh, 20, of Berkeley, also given 30 days.

About 500 demonstrators were arrested during the 1964 sit-ins at the Sheraton Palace and auto row demanding jobs for Negroes.

Agreements with San Francisco hotel operators and auto dealers resulted in pledges of job opportunity for Negroes. Another aftermath was creation of a San Francisco Human Rights Commission.

Maloney handed out jail terms yesterday to more than 25 persons, including the Hallinans. The penalties ranged from 15 days and a $29 fine to 40 days and a $220 fine.

The Hallinans and Miss Walsh were assessed $56 fines.

Ex-Chief of CORE Hired by New Jersey

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — James Farmer, former national director of the Congress of Racial Equality, has been hired as an $80-a-day consultant in New Jersey's war on poverty.

The state Office of Economic Opportunity said Farmer would advise Gov. Richard J. Hughes' special task force on adult literacy opportunities.
