He Cares About People!

Councilmember Leon Williams Cares About

Where they live . . . how they live . . . why they live . . .

As we enter the 1980's, San Diego must be concerned with the human problems of its 800,000 people if we are to escape the disaster and decay of this nation's larger and older cities.

There must be a human element to our physical planning process. The city is where people live. It can be ugly and abrasive with air pollution, noise and traffic congestion, and frictions, or it can be exciting and inspiring to the people who live in it.

Only sensitive city government can be responsive to the human concerns and desires and make difficult decisions which will enhance the quality of life for all San Diegans.

Leon Williams has worked very hard to make the quality of life what it should be because he cares about people. With your continued concern and support he can do more.

Dear Neighbor:

This is my daughter, Lisa. My wife Martha & I want for her what all concerned parents want for their children — a clean, safe and healthy environment enabling her to live a productive meaningful life. That is why we welcome the challenge to further improve the quality of life in our community and city.

If you look at my record you will find that as your councilmember I've worked hard to improve the quality of life for all our children. Together we can do more.

Sincerely,

Leon
