Take a look at his record.

Councilman Williams is the man who:

- Got city approval to plan three major industrial parks within South San Diego for more jobs and a better economy.
- Fought for high Affirmative Action goals.
- Exposed the wasteful dealings of the General Services Administration which resulted in federal investigations.
- Created a special task force to determine ways to keep social service and human care agencies close to the urban center.
- Sponsored a far reaching Council policy to make all meetings of city boards, commissions and corporations open to the public.
- Called for a public review of files the police may be keeping on you.
- Brings the experience of administering the highly successful Neighborhood Youth Corp and the San Diego Urban League to the City Council.
- Won Council support for state laws which would require gas station operators to post prices of gasoline on signs visible to the motorist.
- Warned shoppers of how meatpackers were cheating on labeling.
- Backed innovative police reforms resulting in community oriented policing and the highly successful beat approach.
- Advocated new rules which will enable industry and nonprofit organizations to combat vandalism.
- Voted for the toughest campaign reform law in the nation.
- Is among the most highly educated members of the Council. He has a degree in public administration and is nearing completion of his doctorate in urban development.
- Moved to make sure that all low and moderate income housing built with new state financing will meet high standards and be made available to the people who need it.
- Coordinated local efforts to beautify Southeast San Diego with a volunteer, self help clean up program.
- Proposed the establishment of the city's first Consumer Affairs Advisory Board and Consumer Affairs department.

The list goes on. Leon should too.
