A San Diego City Council committee has encouraged a Black operated aviation academy in its efforts to lease facilities at Brown Field, in Otay Mesa.

The Council's Transportation and Land Use Committee said it would recommend approval of a sublease of Pacific Southwest Airlines facilities by New World Aviation if there is no loss of revnue to the city, according to Committee Chairman Leon Williams.

Williams said New World Aviation would have to negotiate with PSA for the sublease.

Gene Peters, president of New World, called the committee's action "A giant step."

If successful in getting a sublease from PSA, the contract would still have to be approved by the San Diego City Council, Williams said.

Under New World Aviation's proposal, the company would establish an educational program oriented to air transportation and aerospace in order to create career development and business expertise in the air transportation field.
