dear anna banana,
well, here i am, snacking on company time and just generally goofing off when i could be filing or doing something even less interesting. nancy bussard who works down the hall and is a hippy (and who parked her car in our theoretical parking space until she got a couple of tickets) hates filing so much that she waits until she has a stack four inches thick before she even considers filing.

thank you for the sea anenome. ulli was staying here for a couple of days and he really liked it. Of course, since the box was so big i was expecting something a lot smaller than what came, but you knew i really like that thingey. tell mother that everyone like the clothes she buys me. I like the white dress, although everyone here thinks it's a chrstmas dress. Old Herschel Halbert, whom she met, always comments on my clothes and appreciates mother's taste.

pat's birthday is tomorrow. freeman is coming to surprise him after telling him he couldn't come this week (tee hee), and pat thinks he's getting all the things he asked for when he's not. big surprise.

We saw a dopey Bob Dylan movie last Saturday - Dont' Look Back. Boy, if you want to still respect b.d. you'd better not see it because he is really an idiot little twirp dude who is really stupid. the reason they call it don't look back is because if you do you get very nauseous. the movie with it was the monterey pop festival, which is a good music movie, although half the people that were in it are dead now - Brian Jones, Jimi Hendrix, Janice Joplin, Otis Redding. These pop stars certainly have a rather high mortality rate for some reason. All the really great bands were in it - jefferson airplan, country joe, hendrix, etc. those were the good old music days in rock and roll.

the cherry trees almost didn't bloom for the cherry blossom festival, and i wish they hadn't although the million or so high school bands drumming up and down would have been disappointed. sunday i went out a drew two of the trees (boring drawings) at the library of congress.

o, for pat's birthday i got him a little plate mover like the one you had, and tomorrow his oatmeal is going to be flopping all over the place.

well, can't think of anything much else. thanks for sending all the stuff.

Love, b.
