National Bar Association 1998 Hall of Fame Induction

Institutions are the embodiment of civilization and the collective spirit and will of men and women, passing on from generation to generation the heritage of a people; insuring the continuity of education, religion, and commerce; preserving the mores, culture and laws of a nation; and giving viability and substance to the continuum of life. Whether institutions are for good or evil is determined largely by the intrinsic fairness and justice of their purpose and motivation, but ultimately by their operation and interpretation as composites of action.

The Hall of Fame was inaugurated in 1986 by then President Fred D. Gray, Sr., to honor those lawyers who have been licensed to practice for forty years or more and who have made significant contributions to the cause of justice. As we meet on the 73rd Anniversary of the National Bar Association, it is appropriate to pause and recognize those among us who have by, through and within institutions in their communities, states and this nation, extracted and demanded the greater good for all. The men and women inducted into the Hall of Fame today join their colleagues whose courage, intellectual accomplishments, professional achievements and community contributions deserve the highest recognition.
